Dear Lothar:

Your comments about the Q & A were most cogent.

We very much regret 'misleading' you. In our first discussion, I had hoped to be able to quote the answers from each respondent without any summary. But so many responses were of the 'yes' and 'no' variety, which seemed unreadable unless we provided text and substance. This, Dick and I did. Perhaps, it is unfortunate that we tended to quote the more complete responses, even when we disagreed with them. Your comments led us to edit the answers, and I am enclosing a revised text.

Should this text meet with your approval, we can make these corrections in the galleys. Should this correction not meet with your approval, perhaps you would make other corrections, and we could edit the galleys.

If there is another course that will serve your interests and those of our readers, we should be pleased to hear from you. I expect to see you in Mexico City, where we may be able to have an opportunity to resolve this question at leisure.

Again, we are grateful for your candor and cooperation.

Sincerely yours,

Max Fink, M.D.
Professor of Psychiatry
