Dear Leo:

It was a pleasure to show you around the Institute.
I am grateful for a copy of the picture that you sent me.

During these past few weeks I have become a student again, and devote many hours to the intricacies of a new devil. The computer is a fascinating engineering product but requires a degree of exactness which social scientists, like ourselves, ordinarily lack. If nothing else, I believe that computers will replace latin as a training device for the minds of young students, and as such, will probably become the bane of their existence.

Sincerely yours,

Max Fink, M. D.
