Dear Dr. Marsan:

I regret that I am unable to deliver the document to be added to the Bibliography, as stated in our earlier conversations. The failure to accomplish this mission is due, in part, to a severe illness these many weeks; but also to an awareness that the overview I was presenting would be insufficient unless it was more fully documented than originally planned.

I had available an overview which was similar to Dr. Brazier's 1964 article, but with the appearance of her report I became concerned. My concern is related to the fact that a simple statement would no longer suffice since, if our conclusions differed, I would have to document the differences very fully to be credible. To do so has required a detailed review of the literature, and this is now in progress, and will not be complete for a few weeks.

I would recommend that the Bibliography be published as originally planned. The new document will be submitted separately.

Please accept my apology for the difficulties I have caused you, and my regrets in not accomplishing the mission. I am most grateful for your help and consideration, and hope we can get the proofs back within a few days of receipt.

Sincerely yours,

Max Fink, M.D.
