Dear Tony:

I very much enjoyed the discussions at the CEAN. You seem surprised that we, in America, were already making direct applications of computer methods for clinical purposes.

In my report, I described two applications to clinical psychopharmacology which are ongoing in my laboratories. At the same time as I was working on this program, Prof. E. Roy John and my co-worker, Dr. J. Volavka, were developing a computer-based Neurophysiology Clinic. A description of their application is enclosed as you requested. When I inquired last week, I was told that they have a waiting list of more than two hundred who seek this service.

My best regards.

Sincerely yours,

Max Fink, M. D.
