Dear Heinz:

Thank you very much for sending me the reference to Ziolk. I have requested our library to obtain a copy of this article and look forward to reading it.

Enclosed are four reports which relate to the problem of individual differences in response to pharmacol therapy. The off-print regarding combined chlorpromazine-procyclidine in depressive disorders has been accepted by Jonathan for Psychopharmacologia.

In addition to these references, I am including a reprint of a paper entitled " Psychological Factors Affecting Individual Differences in Behavioral Response to Convulsive Therapy". The principles discussed in this paper, I believe, are just as true for psychotropic drugs, although we have not done as extensive a study program for drugs as we did for ECT.

Also, there is a report by my former associate, Donald F. Klein in Psychopharmacologia V: 397,1964. In this article he describes two types of anxiety syndromes and has carried our typological assessments further than in the reports which we worked on together.

I hope that Dick Wittenborn and Jonathan are successful in having the reports of this symposium published.

Sincerely yours,

Max Fink, M.D.
Director
