Dear Barbara,

I am pleased to send you a copy of the report which you requested. A more up-to-date version has been accepted by the Journal of Nervous and Mental Disease and should appear within the next few months.

This has been an old love of mine and it gave me great pleasure to present this material this year. I have collected the information for at least a decade and while the psychiatric profession has become increasingly involved with catecholamines, acetylcholine has generally been forgotten. I think it is an important element in the nervous system and especially in our present treatment methods.

I look forward to seeing you again in New York. My best regards.

Sincerely yours,

Max Fink, M.D.
Professor of Psychiatry
