

73SB-722

June 21st, 1973

Dr. L. Lange,
Department of Neurology,
Central Middlesex Hospital,
Park Royal,
London, N.W.10, England.

Dear Leo,

It was a pleasure meeting you in Oss, and the time of our get-together was all too short. I must say again how impressed I am with your progress in setting up a study unit. We are now determining the dosage of amitriptyline. I just received the GB-94 this week and should begin my studies during July.

I am writing because a very close friend, Dr. Melvin Muroff, a practicing psychologist from our community, is on his way to England for his holidays. He is a longtime sufferer with a herniated lumbar disc, and has suffered surgery. He has had a recurrence recently, and is now in some pain. This is sufficient to make him feel uncomfortable, but insufficient to keep him from his holidays. He asked my advice as to the name of a neurologist that he might see in case he had difficulty, and I have taken the liberty of giving him your name at Central Middlesex Hospital. Should he call you, I would be grateful for any assistance that you may give him.

My best regards.

Sincerely yours,

Max Fink, M.D.
Professor of Psychiatry

MF/ij