Dear Stan:

I want to write to apologize for the awkwardness in Washington. I had been trying very hard for a number of weeks to discuss some important details regarding my appointment and we had agreed that it might be possible to do so that evening. I had to leave up to him whether he wanted to invite others and thereby make a social evening of it, or to use the opportunity away from his telephone to discuss the actual working conditions.

I am most anxious that you get to know him better and would like to arrange such an opportunity when I am in New York. I'm most sorry if my behavior seemed to be abrupt, but I did very much want to have this opportunity to resolve some of my questions regarding our working together.

I will be in New York the week of April 18th and will call you at that time. Please accept my apologies.

Sincerely yours,

Max Fink, M.D.
Professor of Psychiatry
